

A Level History - Paper 2H updates to exam content 2022

Guidance from AQA / your History Teachers

- Questions on the exam will be focus on the areas of study highlighted below, and not those struck through.
- AQA states you can either rely only on info from that section, or additionally wider knowledge of the course.

However:

- As you will see below, a lack of knowledge of content that has been struck through would in some cases make it much harder to write a good essay in this exam, so think in terms of prioritising certain areas over others, and not in terms of choosing not to revise or resit some content whatsoever.
- The 2 exceptions to this are pre-1789 and the domestic History of Directory 1795 – 1799, where you won't need to revise much unless it effects your understanding of other parts of the course - I would still recommend getting familiar with Napoleon's military campaigns during the Directory.
- I will put together a list of likely essay questions based on this update, but remember this is just my best guess no one can predict an exam accurately, so cover your bases by revising all the big debates and preparing as many essay plans as possible.

Part one: the end of Absolutism and the French Revolution, 1774–1795
